

Butterfly Hypothesis Or Godly Greeting Hypothesis

Similar to the Zoo Hypothesis.

This idea is an explanation of what might happen when humanity sees something they cannot comprehend. It could be an explanation for possible 'alien, paranormal and UAP sightings'.

This is an analogy:

Imagine you are a butterfly. Most butterflies have a short lifespan around two weeks.

You live on a somewhat secluded area. You never saw a human, until you do.

The human sees you, comes closer. The human extends a finger towards you to crawl on.

You see their giant eyes, feel their breath. The human might say "Hey, little buddy!"

But your tiny butterfly brain cannot comprehend this message and could never do so.

All you saw was a giant being, perhaps mostly out of focus, if the human wore colorful clothing you saw colors flashing in the distance. You fly away out of fear, or the human just continues their leisurely walk.

You have no idea what happened, you experienced a weird phenomena that seemed highly intelligent and powerful. It spoke in a way that is not familiar and impossible to understand. You might be shocked. For you this is a rare event, and will never happen again. Imagine butterflies could talk to each other. The butterfly tells its buddies and everyone around it. "I saw something weird, it was huge, incomprehensible and tried to communicate with me!" The other butterflies might listen or laugh. For the human it was a mundane occurrence, and might forget about it.

Now, in this analogy the butterflies are humans.

And the human are the aliens, or other phenomena we cannot comprehend (yet).

Humans claim to have seen things across time: the Wheels of Ezekiel, fairies, God, UFO's, aliens and so on.

For aliens we are just creatures that are mundane, not very interesting. Our lifespans are short.

Our experience limited. We might experience encounters that are rare for us and "blow our minds".

For the aliens it is just a normal occurrence. Their lifespans might span eons, their world could span across light years. They see humans once in a while, and perhaps they say "hi".

And move on with their lives.

It would explain why unexplained events seem rare and hard to comprehend.

Why, if there are extra-terrestrials, we don't have an alliance of sorts. We are too different, and both live our own lives.
